

After a business meeting has concluded, Scarlett and the office manager, Mr. Bird are the last two in the conference room. Scarlett was in the office, strictly as an observer from the parent company. During the meeting, Mr Bird alluded to the fact that Scarlett's presence at the meeting was inconsequential.

MR BIRD
Good day Ms. Speight.

He takes a step towards the door.

SCARLETT
Have a seat Mr. Bird, this meetings not over.

MR BIRD
Excuse me?

SCARLETT
(with authority)
Sit!

Mr. Bird does as he's told.

MR BIRD
How can I help you Ms Speight?

SCARLETT
I just wanted to clear up our misunderstanding.

MR BIRD
What misunderstanding?

SCARLETT
The one where you were foolish enough to believe that my presence was inconsequential.

MR BIRD
I meant no disrespect. I was just saying that as the manager of this office I have the authority to determine what is and isn't needed at this branch. I didn't want them to get things confused.

SCARLETT
Well I don't want you to get things confused.
(MORE)

(CONTINUED)

CONTINUED:

SCARLETT (CONT'D)

You may be the manger of Myrick Realty but I'm a managing partner of Elemel Enterprises which is your parent company. So in layman's terms, I run this shit not you. So, as the young lady suggested, put together a training to aide your agents in overcoming some of their a recent adversities.

MR BIRD

I don't have time. I have meetings all week.

SCARLETT

Clear your calender for the week or I can clear it permanently.

Mr. Bird scoffs at his new directives, but he knows to be compliant.

SCARLETT (CONT'D)

Remember, this is not a democracy, it's a dictatorship.

Scarlett, makes her way to the door as Mr. Bird sits there looking stupid.

SCARLETT (CONT'D)

Have a good day Mr. Bird.